ST. TERESA'S MISSION STATEMENT

*As members of St. Teresa's Parish we fulfill our baptismal commitment by being the hands and heart of Christ in our world.
We achieve this commitment by accepting the human dignity of all persons, and by advocating for and serving those oppressed in our society.
The community of St. Teresa's finds its strength to fulfill this through participation in the Eucharist, prayer, learning the building of relationships, and action for Justice.*

LITTLE CHILDREN'S AID

You may have noticed our Mass Intentions have recently included many for an organization, Little Children's Aid. Founded in 1907 to provide aid to the children left orphaned and homeless in the earthquake and fire, it later became an organization of women committed to supporting the programs of Catholic Charities CYO. Today, their purpose remains the same—to respond to the immediate needs of underprivileged youth through financial contributions and group service projects.

THE CATHOLIC THEOLOGY OF MARRIAGE: CONSENT AND COMPETENCE

Last week I wrote about the Catholic theology of marriage, focusing on permanence, fidelity, and children. This week I'd like to examine two other elements of Catholic marriage: consent and competence.

Unfortunately, issues involving consent and competence usually do not come to light until after a marriage ends in civil divorce. When a couple gets divorced and one or both of the parties want to remarry in the Church, the annulment process examines the previous marriage and tries to determine why the initial marriage failed. Under such scrutiny it may be determined that consent or competence was not present. Remember that an annulment states that no marriage existed because something essential was lacking.

For a Catholic marriage to be valid, consent must be freely given. An example where consent might not be present would be when a couple gets married because of a pregnancy. In this case, shame or family pressure could be factors that might inhibit free consent. Another example where consent might be lacking would be when one or both of the parties is chemically dependent (drug addiction or alcohol). In this situation – from both a legal and psychological perspective – it is questionable whether a person can freely consent when chemical dependency is actively present.

Competence refers to the ability of a person to give consent. In the example cited above, a chemically dependent person is not competent to give consent. "Lack of due competence" could also apply if an individual's personal history is marked by trauma or abuse. In such a case the person may be so scarred from the experience that he or she is not capable of trust or intimacy. Until such issues are resolved, the person might not be competent to freely enter into a marriage covenant.

During the marriage preparation process every effort is made to determine both a person's competence and the ability to give free consent. Unfortunately, human beings have character flaws and shortcomings. As we grow and mature most of us work through these issues, but in some cases this doesn't happen. When such circumstances cause a marriage to end in divorce, pastoral practice has several goals in mind. First, we try to help the person heal from the broken marriage. Second, we try to address those issues that caused the disintegration of the relationship. And, finally, we offer an annulment process that, hopefully, will allow the person to freely remarry within the Church.
